This report compares your two birth charts: every close connection between your planets, and where each of your planets falls in the other's chart. Every position is calculated precisely for your times and places of birth.

You two in a sentence

Emma, this is a relationship with a gentle, almost instinctive affection at its heart, carried by your Venus sitting right on James's Ascendant and your Moon in easy harmony with his Venus, but it is also a relationship that asks both of you to grow up around work, ambition and the way you talk to each other, because your Saturn presses on his Sun, his Mercury and his Midheaven at the same time. The warmth is real and the lessons are real, and the story of you two is learning to hold both.

Who you each are

You, Emma, are a Leo Sun with Mars close beside it in your 7th house, so you bring a bright, generous and rather dramatic energy straight into your partnerships. You want to be seen, admired and met with real enthusiasm, and you tend to pour your heart into the person in front of you. Underneath that fire sits a Pisces Moon in your 1st house, which makes you far more sensitive and absorbent than your confident exterior suggests. You pick up moods, you feel things deeply, and you need a partner who notices when you have quietly gone soft inside. Your Capricorn Ascendant gives you a composed, capable surface, and people often read you as steadier and more self contained than you feel. Your Venus is at the very start of Cancer in your 6th house, so you show love through care, loyalty and practical devotion: cooking, remembering, turning up. In a relationship you need to be adored out loud, held when you wobble, and trusted to take things seriously.

James is a Taurus Sun with Mercury and Mars alongside it, all tucked into his 12th house. He is grounded, steady and slow to change course, but a good deal of his inner life happens out of sight. He may not announce what he is feeling or planning, and he needs private space to process before he acts. His Gemini Moon, also in the 12th, is curious and restless beneath the calm Taurus exterior, and it is opposed by Jupiter and Uranus in his chart, so his emotional weather can shift more suddenly than people expect. His Cancer Ascendant with Venus sitting close to it gives him a soft, approachable, caring presence: he comes across as kind and homely, and he is. His Venus in Cancer, like yours, loves through nurturing and belonging. In a relationship James needs security, patience with his quieter moments, and someone who does not mistake his stillness for indifference.

You share Venus in Cancer, which is worth saying plainly: however different your Sun signs are, you both value the same things in love, which are safety, loyalty, home and tenderness.

Where your charts connect

Your Saturn square James's Midheaven (exact). This is the tightest link between you, and it concerns direction, status and the shape of James's public life. Your Saturn in Scorpio presses on the point in his chart that represents career and reputation, and in practice you may find yourself taking his ambitions seriously, perhaps more seriously than he does at times. You can be the person who asks the hard question about where he is going. It can feel supportive or it can feel like pressure, depending on how it is delivered, and that difference is largely in your hands.

Your Jupiter trine James's Moon (exact). Here is the warmth. Your Jupiter in Aquarius, sitting in your 1st house, flows beautifully to his Gemini Moon. You cheer him up. Your natural optimism and breadth of view make him feel lighter and more hopeful, and he probably finds that he laughs more around you and feels more free to say what he thinks. This is one of the loveliest things you give him.

Your Venus conjunct James's Ascendant (exact). Your Venus sits precisely on the degree of his rising sign. This is a classic sign of attraction and of liking the look and feel of someone from the first meeting. You find him appealing in a way that feels natural rather than effortful, and he tends to feel more attractive and more at ease in himself when you are around. It gives you a shared softness and a sense that you simply fit side by side.

Your Midheaven opposite James's Sun (exact). Your career direction and public identity sit directly opposite his core self. This can mean he is deeply involved in your ambitions and you in his, but it can also mean a feeling that one person's goals pull against the other's sense of who they are. It asks for negotiation rather than assumption.

Your Venus trine James's Saturn (1°). A quietly binding aspect. Your affection meets his sense of commitment and responsibility, and the result is a feeling that this is a relationship that can last and be built upon. He steadies your love and you soften his seriousness.

Your Mercury square James's Sun (1°). How you say things and who he is can rub against each other. You tend to speak with Leo flair and conviction, and he, as a Taurus, can feel talked at rather than talked with. More on this below.

Your Saturn opposite James's Mercury (1°) and your Saturn opposite James's Sun (1°). Your Saturn sits across from both his Sun and his Mercury, which is significant. You may be the voice of caution, realism and limits in his life. At best you give him structure and an honest mirror. At worst he may feel judged or dampened, and you may feel that you are always the one being sensible.

Your Neptune opposite James's Ascendant (1°). Your Neptune sits on his Descendant, the point of partnership. You may seem slightly mysterious or idealised to him, and he may project a dream onto you that is not quite the real Emma. This brings romance and also a need for honesty about who you actually are.

Your Sun sextile James's Moon (2°). A warm, friendly, supportive link. Your identity and his feelings get on easily. He feels understood by your way of being in the world, and you feel emotionally welcomed by him.

Your Moon trine James's Venus (2°). Emotional and romantic compatibility in one of its gentlest forms. Your Pisces Moon and his Cancer Venus are both water, and they flow together. You feel loved in the way you need to be loved.

Your Mars trine James's Jupiter and Uranus (both 2°). Your drive and energy spark his sense of adventure and his wish for freedom. You can be a couple who gets things started, tries new things and pushes each other out of a rut.

Your Pluto trine James's Ascendant (2°) and your Neptune sextile James's Saturn (2°). Deep and subtle supports: a sense that the bond has depth and that your imagination and his discipline can work together rather than against each other.

Love and attraction

The romantic pulse between you runs mostly through water. Your Pisces Moon trine his Cancer Venus is the kind of contact where affection does not need explaining: he instinctively knows how to be gentle with you, and you instinctively feel safe receiving it. Add your Venus sitting exactly on his Ascendant and you have an attraction that is as much about comfort and recognition as it is about excitement. You like how he looks, moves and carries himself, and he feels more himself in your company.

What you do not have, and it is worth being honest about, is a direct Venus to Mars or Mars to Mars contact between you. The chemistry here is tender rather than fiery, and the fire that does exist comes through your Mars trine his Jupiter and Uranus: you energise him, you get him up and out, and there is a playful, slightly unpredictable charge when you take the lead. This is a relationship where desire tends to grow from closeness and shared enthusiasm rather than from friction.

The house overlays deepen this picture. James's Gemini Moon falls in your 5th house of romance, play and creativity. His feelings arrive in the part of your life where you want to be adored and to have fun, so he brings lightness, chatter and affection into your romantic world. You may find that he makes you feel young and playful, and that his emotional presence is simply enjoyable. His Pluto falls in your 8th house of intimacy and deep change, which suggests that beneath the easy surface he touches something more profound in you: the relationship may stir questions about trust, merging and what you are willing to share.

From the other side, your Pluto falls in his 5th house, so you have a transformative effect on his sense of romance and pleasure. You are not a casual presence in his heart. Your Ascendant and your Neptune both fall in his 7th house of partnership, which is one of the strongest signs in this whole report that he sees you as a genuine partner rather than a passing interest. Your Ascendant there means your whole manner and presence fit his picture of what a close relationship looks like. Your Neptune there means he also idealises you a little, and the romance of that is lovely as long as it stays connected to the real woman in front of him.

Your Venus opposite his Neptune (2°) adds a dreamy, slightly unreal quality to how you love each other. Interestingly, you both have Venus opposite Neptune in your own charts, so you each already know what it is to long for a love that is bigger than ordinary life. Between you this can be genuinely enchanting, as long as you both remember to check the dream against the daylight.

Talking and understanding each other

Communication is where this relationship asks the most of you, and also where it has the most potential, because so much of your energy lands in each other's 3rd house. James's Sun and Mercury fall in your 3rd house, and your Sun and Mars fall in his. In plain terms, you two talk a lot, you think about each other a lot, and the quality of your everyday conversation shapes the whole relationship.

Your own Mercury is in Leo, retrograde, in your 7th house, and square your Saturn. You communicate with warmth and conviction, but you also rehearse and replay conversations, and you can be harder on yourself about what you said than anyone else is. James's Mercury is in Taurus, retrograde, in his 12th house, close to his Sun and Mars. He thinks slowly, deliberately and privately, and he is uncomfortable being hurried into a response. He is also stubborn once he has settled on a view.

Your Mercury square his Sun (1°) describes the characteristic friction: your way of expressing yourself, which is bright, expressive and sometimes a little theatrical, can land on him as pressure or performance. He may go quiet, and you may read that quiet as disinterest when it is actually digestion. Your Saturn opposite his Mercury (1°) adds another layer: when you respond to his ideas, you may sound more critical or sceptical than you intend, and he may start to hold back what he is thinking to avoid the sense of being marked. Over time that would be a real loss, because his Gemini Moon needs to talk things through to feel settled.

When you argue, you are likely to be the one who wants it out in the open and resolved now, with your Leo planets in the 7th house and your Mars there too. He is likely to withdraw, go steady and immovable, and come back to it a day later with a considered position. Neither style is wrong. The practical key is that you give him time without reading it as rejection, and he tells you plainly that he is thinking rather than simply going silent. Your Jupiter trine his Moon is your best friend here: when you lead with humour and generosity rather than correction, he opens up, and your Sun sextile his Moon means that when you are simply being yourself, he feels he understands you.

Where you may clash

Your Saturn opposite his Sun and Mercury, and square his Midheaven. This is the heaviest cluster, and it is about authority, criticism and direction. You may find yourself feeling responsible for him, or disappointed when he does not take the shape you think he should, and he may feel that your approval is conditional. Practical way through: say out loud what you admire about him and his choices at least as often as you offer advice, and let him ask for your input rather than always supplying it.

Your Midheaven opposite his Sun and square his Midheaven. Your life direction and his identity, and both your career paths, do not line up neatly. One of you pursuing something fully may feel to the other like being left behind or pulled off course. Practical way through: treat your two careers as a shared project with two columns rather than a competition, and revisit the plan together at set times rather than only when something has gone wrong.

Your Mercury square his Sun, and opposite his Midheaven. Your words and his sense of self and standing can rub. He may feel you speak about him, or about his work, in ways that make him uncomfortable, especially in company. Practical way through: agree what is private and what is shareable, and check with him before you tell a story in which he is the subject.

Your Neptune opposite his Ascendant, and your Venus opposite his Neptune. Illusion runs both ways. He may see you through a rosy filter, and you may love a version of him that is slightly more romantic than the man himself. Practical way through: ask each other, every now and then, "what do you actually need from me this week?" and answer concretely. Dreams survive better when they are fed with specifics.

What you bring out in each other

James in your chart: his Sun and Mercury in your 3rd house make him a thinking companion. He stimulates your mind, brings ideas and conversation, and makes everyday errands and local life feel more interesting. His Moon in your 5th makes him feel like fun, romance and play. His Venus and Ascendant in your 6th house mean he turns up in the practical, daily side of your life: he is the one who helps with routines, cares about your health and makes the ordinary feel loved. His Mars in your 4th house brings energy, and sometimes tension, into your home and family life: he gets things done around the house, but he can also stir things up there. His Jupiter and Uranus in your 10th house are a gift for your career, suggesting that his presence opens doors, gives you confidence in public and encourages you to take unexpected professional risks. His Saturn in your 9th house may make you more disciplined about study, travel or your beliefs, and his Neptune in your 12th house touches your inner life with softness and the occasional fog. His Pluto in your 8th house, as noted, is where he changes you most deeply.

You in James's chart: your Venus in his 1st house makes him feel more attractive, more loved and more at ease in his own skin. Your Sun and Mars in his 3rd house wake up his mind and his voice: you make him think faster and speak up more, which his Gemini Moon quietly loves even when his Taurus Sun resists. Your Moon in his 10th house means your feelings are tangled up with his public standing: you care how he is seen, and your emotional support can lift his reputation and his confidence. Your Mercury in his 4th house means you talk about home, roots and family a great deal, and your voice becomes part of the atmosphere of his private life. Your Jupiter in his 9th house expands his horizons: travel, learning, bigger beliefs. Your Saturn and Uranus in his 6th house suggest you shake up and then structure his daily habits, health and work routine, which he may both need and resist. Your Ascendant and Neptune in his 7th house, and your Pluto in his 5th, mean that you are, for him, the picture of a partner and the person who transforms his idea of love.

Making it work

Lead with praise before advice. Your Saturn touches his Sun, Mercury and Midheaven, so your opinion carries weight with him whether you intend it or not. Make sure the first thing he hears from you about his work, his plans or his words is something genuine and warm, and keep suggestions for when he asks. Your Jupiter trine his Moon shows how easily you can lift him when you choose to.

Give silence a name. With his Mercury retrograde in the 12th house and your Leo planets wanting a response now, agree a simple signal for "I am thinking, not withdrawing". It protects your Pisces Moon from reading rejection into a pause, and it protects him from feeling hurried.

Plan your two careers as one map with two roads. Your Midheaven opposite his Sun and square his Midheaven, and his Jupiter and Uranus in your 10th house, say that your ambitions are intertwined. Sit down together a few times a year and look honestly at what each of you wants next, and what the other one needs in order to support it.

Feed the everyday. His Venus and Ascendant sit in your 6th house, and your Saturn and Uranus sit in his. Love between you lives in routines: shared meals, walks, sorting the small stuff together. Protect those habits, because for two people with Venus in Cancer, that is where security is built.

Check the dream against the day. With your Neptune on his Descendant and your Venus opposite his Neptune, keep asking each other simple, concrete questions about what you need, and answer plainly. The romance between you is strong enough to survive honesty, and your Venus trine his Saturn suggests that honesty is what will make it last.
